

The Experience-Complexity Gap

Nursing's emerging shortage goes beyond headcount

NURSING WORKFORCE EXPERIENCE

Hospitals and health systems around the world face a new kind of shortage among the nursing workforce: an experience shortage.

The workforce is becoming increasingly novice as experienced nurses retire. At the same time, care complexity is rising and shows no signs of abating.

These two countervailing forces create a gap between the experience of the workforce and the complexity of care provided.

.....

We've surfaced three strategies to help close the experience-complexity gap.

CARE COMPLEXITY

TEACH
novice nurses
more effectively.

Redesign new nurse onboarding and training to accelerate the transition from novice to competent.

REDISTRIBUTE
experience across the organisation.

Create internal career pathways that move nurses you already have to the areas where you need them most.

DIFFERENTIATE practice for experienced nurses.

Establish distinct roles that scale the impact of competent, proficient, and expert nurses on the unit.
